The context

The text is that set of circumstances or situations during a communication process where the sender and receiver are placed, and the message is produced. These circumstances permit, sometimes, to appreciate it correctly it is called extralinguistic context, which can be of different types, for example, cultural, social, educational, historical, economic, psychological, etc.

Context is essential in communication since variations in the same language and cultural differences make that correct for some people for others, it may not be. So, the context is one of the principal areas that should be analyzed when talking to another person, listening to a song, watching a movie, or reading a book or article.

For the analysis of any type of communication, the social context, the linguistic context, the cultural context, the context defined by the questions, who, how, when, where, why also called environment, should be taken into account.
